AN AWFUL CALAMITY

Twenty-Two Persons Carried Down to Death

AND NEAR HALF A HUNDRED WOUNDED

By the Collapse of Three Floors of the Old Ford Theater in Washington, in Which Lincoln Was Assassinated.

The Building Known to Have Been Insecure, But the Fact Ignored and the House Crowded With Clerks.

Sickening Scenes at the Wreck and in the Morgue and Hospital—Too Much "Economy" Responsible for the Accident.

being the wives, daughters and relatives of the actors and actresses. Their weeping and frantic cries were heartrending.

They greatly interfered with the work of the physicians, and Dr. Kerr, who is in charge of the hospital, determined to put them out.

Load after load of the wounded, blinded with debris, and with limbs broken and maimed, were dumped at the door. They had to remain outside for some time, as the force and facilities of the physicians were unequal to the emergency. As quickly as the scene could be cleared, the伤者 were transferred by the young men graduates of the city, could do so, they examined and dressed the wounds, and they were sent upstairs to more comfortable quarters.

Priests and ministers were soon on the spot, and being at once admitted, repaired to the cots of the injured, where they administered spiritual consolation.

Three men reached the hospital in a dying condition so badly injured that they were taken from the dressing room and sent to the morgue where they shortly expired. Charles S. Miller and J. Brad Jones were among them, while the other was a young man about 26 years old. The first two were horribly mutilated but the last one did not bear an apparent trace of even an abrasion.

At the other hospitals and in the drug stores adjacent to the accident scene were being enacted.

An incident of the day was the number of clerks, who, on hearing of the disaster, flocked to the scene. Utter regardless of their own safety they entered the building, the rear walls of which were warningly bulging out, and ministered to the dying and injured. Ministers of all creeds were present. The hairbreadth escape narrated by the survivors were remarkable.

One of the most thrilling scenes of the entire affair was the sight of a dozen men who were left in a corner of the third floor clambering down a hose pipe to the ground. One of these men and the first to get down was Mr. W. E. Balme, who worked in the center of the third floor. The story can best told in his own words:

"It was at my desk," he said, "when I heard a great roar. There was no premonitory trembling or any kind of warning; just a roar and shake, and the building began to rise up in the center of the floor and then disappear in a blinding cloud of white dust.

Spring for the rear window and called out to my companions to follow. Those who were right near me did so, and we gained a safe place at the rear of the building near the windows. We were completely isolated, however, with no way to get down. The telephone was kept in constant use by persons inquiring for friends.

The first woman to appear and to make an inquiry was Mrs. F. M. Meader, of 921 First street, D. C., and she observed the little brick building, the mutilated body of her husband was the first to meet her eyes.

The scene that followed was a sad one, and Mrs. Meader had to be assisted out from the presence of the ghastly sight. Mr. Meader was 39 years old and came here a year ago from Buffalo, N. Y. His head was crushed and body injured.

Other identifications, with accompanying scenes of heartrending grief, followed.

The responsibility of the accident is in the public press and in congress also. In the public press and in congress also it was called to the bulging walls its darkness and general unsuitability, it continued to be used for the daily employment of nearly 500 government clerks of the pension division of the war office. So the comforting assurance is given that while thirty clerks may have been killed the pension records are all saved and unimpaired.

The building collapsed in the midst of an ill-judged effort to remedy some of its defects. The moral of the disaster, if there is any, is emphasized by the fact that there are two government buildings—the printing office and the Windham building, an annex of the war department, each containing many more employees than were caged in Ford's theater death-trap, and are in an equally unsafe condition.

The last man taken out of the building alive up to 12:30 was Capt. David of Indiana. He was found in the rear of the building, crouched to a depth of two or three feet with pistol and mortar. He had lain there for three hours, but a beam had lodged near him in such a position as to break the fall of the brick and timber, and when lifted up he raised his hand showing that he was conscious. When he was lifted into the Garfield hospital ambulance the crowd saw that he was alive and cheered again and again.

At 10 o'clock noon the ambulances, kept busy carrying away the dead and injured.

All during the long hours while the workmen were using all their strength to rescue as were not past help, the mothers, sisters and daughters of those that had gone down hovered around the front of the building, and with streaming eyes inquired of all whom they met for some tidings of their dear ones. Some could hardly be restrained from pushing their way into the burning building.

A look into the interior tells a sickening tale of how some were taken and others left. Decks are seen half way over the brink of the broken floor, others stand upright, but the chairs which stood beside them and their occupants went down with the crash.

The president was informed of the sad event just as he reached the entrance to the White House, and the clerks, and so he at once interested himself in what was occurring.

Within a few moments a hundred or more men, stripped for police work, jumped into the wreckage in front and the floor which remained standing in the rear. Most of the men were taken to the Emergency hospital, and about half of them were carried to the White before noon. Surgeon-General Sternberg went at once to the scene of disaster upon hearing the news, as did Dr. Ainsworth, who is the chief of the medical and pension division. One company of troops was placed under the direction of Col. of Police Moore, and the second company was intended to assist in the work of rescue and in bringing out bodies. Gen. Grant received reports from time to time and on those he based the hope and belief that the calamity would prove to be less in extent than had at first been apprehended.

The president was informed of the first been feared. He says that the rolls showed that the full force employed in the building numbered 514 persons. A number of these were absent on leave because of illness, so that probably not more than 400 or 450 persons were in the building when the crash came. Then as only half of the floors fell the number of persons who were killed was far less than expected by those who actually escaped with slight injuries or without harm.

Shortly after midday Maj. Moore, chief of police, notified the surgeon in charge that all of those taken from the ruins from that time forward would be sent to the United States naval hospital, where three wards had been prepared to receive the injured.

Dr. Shannon, of the personal staff of the surgeon-general, was in charge of the government medical officers, and every such officer was promptly ordered to the scene of the accident or to the various hospitals. The ambulances of the Red Cross society rendered conspicuous service.

At the morgue the sight was one horrible to behold. The little building, in which was one ice chest and a dissecting table, was not near large enough to hold the dead bodies brought from the wrecked building. At 12:30 the statehood dead body was brought.

There was no one at the morgue who was able to identify the bodies, and so Supt. Schonberger tagged them with numbers as they were brought in. Along the floor they were arranged in numerical order, and during the day thousands of persons called and viewed the ghastly sight. The morgue was filled with the stench of death, and blankets were spread on the floor, and the bodies were laid out as respectably as possible under the circumstances.

Blood from the bodies formed a large pool on the floor and the crushed skulls, broken arms and legs made the scene indescribable. Then there were some of the victims who had not been crushed. They had been smothered to death and the discoloration of their faces gave visible evidence of the cause of death.

In front of the police station there was a large crowd as there was in the yard around the morgue, some attracted there by curiosity and others to identify the dead bodies if possible.

The committee of five which canvassed the meeting, however, succeeded in getting the newspaper of the city which had already initiated relief funds to do the work more thoroughly and satisfactorily than any committee, and it was left with them to do.

The subscription was started in the war department this afternoon for the relief of the sufferers, and this will probably be aided by like movements in the other government departments.

At midnight it was known positively that twenty men were killed and forty-five injured.

The trustees of the Christian church at the suggestion of influential members of the congregation, are figuring on the purchase of the J. C. Lake property on the east side of North Water street, between North and Edwards, as a site for a new church. The lot has a frontage of 108 feet and is 152 feet deep, ample space for a fine church and parsonage. Many members do not like the Curtis corner. They think it too remote from the street car line. One of the trustees stated to day that the Lake property is looked upon as one of the best points proposed.

BETTER NEWS STILL.

The Latest News from the Volcanic Mines—Developing Riches by the Million—The Greatest Deposit of Gold and Silver on Earth.

An article appeared in this paper June 7th in relation to the richness of the Volcanic mines in Arizona, owned principally by Hunter Bros., Barber and Lower and other Decatur parties, in which it was stated that a smaller company had offered them $24,000 a month for 40 tons of ore daily, and that they had accepted the offer, which would give the stockholders of the mine a net profit of over $200,000 annually; and also, that the mine would yield four or five times this amount, or over $1,000,000 annually, as soon as the company credits their own smelter at the mine.

It was also stated in the same article that by this offer, which they accepted, these gentlemen are assured that they have dropped upon a "bonanza" which means boundless wealth to every one who has ventured to put his money into the property and become a part of it; that the offer of $24,000 a month for 10 tons, which 40 tons per day means, amounts to $20 per ton net to the company; and that the profits of the smelting added, would at least make this surface ore worth about $300 per ton, or $450 a car.

This looked enormous and had the appearance of a fairy story rather than a bona fide business matter. That was only four days ago. But since that time these gentlemen have received telegrams and letters which make the former news appear insignificant in comparison. Yesterday they received a telegram from the manager of the Volcanic mines stating that the same smelters, upon an assay of first grade ore, one of which appears to be almost incombustible, had offered the company $187.91 per ton. This offer would make the brains of less practical men swim because of its full meaning and yet they are as cool and composed as if they were not the owners of the most marvelous property ever discovered.

Think for a moment what this offer means. The first offer which was on what now proves to be only second grade ore from this property, was magnificent, but the figures on the last offer are startling. The offer of $187.91 per ton, for 40 tons a day means $7,516.40 a net day to the company. It means $195,400 a month and $2,345,160 a year net. This offer would make the brains of less practical men swim because of its full meaning and yet they are as cool and composed as if they were not the owners of the most marvelous property ever discovered.

The City's Finances.

In view of this morning app are an unfair and unjust statement in reference to the finances of the city. It states that the figures show an overdraft of $17,000, whereas the figures show nothing of the kind, and the Record in the same issue to-day publishes the figures to give the lie to the declaration. The figures are:

Total overdraft uncertain amounts $17,078.00

Balance on hand in certain funds $7,029.00

Actual overdraft $10,050.00

The $10,050 overdraft for the past year includes the overdrafts made necessary at the end of the fiscal year, May 1, 1862. The appropriation for the year 1862 was $116,442, actual expenditures, total $93,388.17, leaving an overdraft of $25,062.83.
